

226/4 Lect. C: Introductory Prose Fiction Workshop Winter 2022

Workshop meetings: Monday & Wednesday 14:45-17:30

Instructor: Terry Byrnes

Office hours: See details below

English 226 is an introductory workshop in prose fiction reading and writing. The term "prose fiction" covers a variety of forms, from the brief anecdote to the multi-volume "novel cycle." However, we will often concentrate on the short story—while being completely open to the writing and discussion of longer (and shorter) forms, and to those kinds of story that fall under the loose heading of "experimental."

It is important to note that this workshop is a compressed version of a course that is more frequently offered in a year-long version. The number of hours devoted to the workshop will be the same as in year-long courses, but we will meet more often (twice a week for about 2 ½ hours each meeting). The delivery of winter term classes (on-line or in person) has not yet been determined with certainty, so please be aware that some requirements—though not the goals of the class—may change. The university's current plan (as of 3 January 2022) is for return to class later this month, but that plan is far from a certainty.

Throughout the first weeks of the term, we will study and discuss published fiction from a writer's point of view. This will help us develop a limited but useful set of critical terms and approaches. We will learn to evaluate and appreciate fiction based on its qualities as a developed narrative rather than on the reader's personal likes or dislikes (although those likes and dislikes are important, too). Toward the middle of the term, we will begin to workshop original fiction written by members of the class.

There are no formulas for writing successful fiction, but there are useful guides. Learning to write well always requires reading (widely, in fiction and non-fiction); writing failed stories as well as successful ones; rewriting; and, in our case, the presentation of written work for discussion. The class will offer suggestions, criticism, and support in an attempt to make the trial-and-error process of learning to write a little more efficient. Since most writers are interested in publishing their work, we'll also be mindful of the relationship(s) between writer and reader, of the qualities that can make fiction publishable, and of places to publish.

Students who successfully complete this workshop will have a better understanding of what prose fiction is and how it works, of their own interests and abilities as writers, and of the ways in which lived experience and narratives of experience are quite different. It is likely that we will encounter some of the questions that currently surround all forms of artistic representation. These range from the ethics of "cultural appropriation" to the use of pronouns that indicate gender—and many others. It's important to keep in mind that any position we hold regarding these matters is to be supported with reasoned argument and respectful presentation. The workshop is a place for exploring fiction as a creative practice and for talking about its place in the world.

Workshop Procedure

The workshop has one required text—a course pack with a wide selection of stories that we will discuss and, possibly, you will use as touchstones for your own work. When we begin to discuss your writing, there will be due dates for the completion and submission of each story. You will be responsible for copying, collating, and distributing your writing to the class or for forwarding it to me so it can be posted on Moodle. Normally, at least one class period (or more) after your work has been distributed, the story will be discussed. It's essential that you read all work carefully (at least once) before we discuss it. Ultimately, the workshop produces its own textbook—your writing—and its own gloss on that text.

This course has a Moodle page, which is accessible through your Concordia portal. Weekly plans and messages will be posted there.

N.B. As of 3 January, the course pack exists as a physical object for purchase but I don't know if the university bookstore is open yet, or if it will be open soon. However, the course pack may also be downloaded.

Requirements

- 1) The completion of all assignments. Each assignment is to be dated and will include word count
- 2) In addition to assignments, the completion of a minimum of 20 double-spaced pages (or 10 single-spaced pages, or about 5000 words) of original fiction. This total includes at least two pieces of original fiction one of which may be a substantial rewrite
- 3) Written comments on all stories submitted to the workshop. These are signed, dated, and given to the author
- 4) The submission (during week 6 and at the end of the term) of a list of all the fiction and non-fiction you have read in connection with this class and a list of all stories for which you have supplied written comments to the authors

Evaluation

Your assignments will not be given grades, but their completion is required. The assignments allow you to explore your own process and understanding in an open-ended way. When we begin workshop discussion of your stories, individual stories will not receive grades. They will be discussed in the workshop and the author will receive my written comments. If you'd like additional feedback, see Terry. Always feel free to return to a point you don't understand.

The completion of all assignments and 20 pages (5000 words) of fiction is the minimum requirement for receiving a passing grade. Your final grade will reflect these elements: completion of assignments; your original fiction (including grammar and manuscript preparation); improvement throughout the term; participation (includes written as well as spoken feedback and punctuality). There is no end-of-term portfolio requirement for this class.

Class attendance is essential and required. Absences will affect your final grade in this manner: if you miss 3 classes throughout the term, your grade will be decreased by 1/3 of a letter grade for each additional absence. For instance, if the grade based on quality of writing, improvement and participation is B+, but you have 4 absences for the term, the final grade will be B. Six absences will drop it to B-, and so on.

Important Notes and Dates

Since your fiction is an essential component of the work that serves, in effect, as our textbook, it must be submitted during the life of the course on a schedule that will be circulated. Work submitted to satisfy page requirements at the end of the workshop will not be accepted.

Manuscript Preparation

Manuscripts must be submitted in a way that's consistent with the conventional way printed fiction is formatted and published (see examples in course pack). It must be paginated, have the name of the author, date, and word count. If you do use a personal method of formatting, be prepared to show how it relates to the work. Standard usage is transparent; exceptions compete for the eye's attention and become an element of the narrative itself.

Texts

Other than the course pack, there are no required textbooks for this class, though I recommend best-of anthologies, little magazines (Google “literary magazines” and you’ll find a slew of them), on-line magazines such as Narrative, and commercial magazines such as The New Yorker. I also have a collection of fiction anthologies and I’m happy to loan these books.

Contact

There are no set office hours. However, I will almost always be available before and after class, by appointment, and on Zoom. The goal of this arrangement is to be available to students whose schedules may not mesh with fixed office hours.

E-mail: terence.byrnes@concordia.ca

Office (if classes are in-person): LB 683-6. Phone: 514 848-2424 Ext. 2352.